

Recommendation Letter

Daniel Tan Ke Keng

Aug 2020

I have known Daniel as a teacher in Methodist College since 2019. At the time, I was the Manager of Student Services and also a lecturer in A-Levels Divinity. He joined my class on Religion that I held for a few interested students each week and demonstrated a keenness to learn, asking perceptive questions and thinking through the answers given. He appreciated that I adopted a different approach to my teaching and also took into consideration the fact that I also drew from a wide range of knowledge sources for my conclusions. Not all students respond to this as he did.

Daniel has a group of good friends he made in College. He participated actively in the Christian Fellowship while there, which has about 120 regular attendees every Friday. He is a responsible and multi-talented student and played the drums for the Christian Fellowship sessions on numerous occasions, including auditioning and getting the chance to perform an item with friends with drums for his batch of A-Level Seniors Ball held in July 2019.

He is also well-rounded, participating in various sports events while in College, including a Captain's Ball tournament organized at the College in 2019. He was also class representative for his Pure Mathematics class, due to his high degree of responsibility and leadership demonstrated in his class.

Daniel has shown a keen desire to learn and understand new things, participating and taking special online courses to augment his knowledge in online sales and marketing after completing his A-Level program and his easy switch between English and Chinese is an asset to any institution he may be involved in. His exposure to the world of online business will also do him well in various programs he intends to pursue more deeply.

I have known him to be attentive and perceptive in my classes, always wanting to learn more and know more about the deep spiritual and theological concepts that I teach my students, and for that it goes to show that Daniel has the capacity to grasp and understand a broad range of topics and ideas.

As demonstrated also by his active interest in music, sport and business, he is both a hands-on person with an interest in precision, is competitive and a lifelong learner. He is also a people person and due to his active involvement in church activities has been trained to socialize and be a leader of others. I recommend him highly to your program under scholarship or financial aid of any availability. He will indeed be an asset to any course of study he choose to apply himself towards.

Reference Letter for Daniel Tan Ke Keng

I have taught Daniel Tan Ke Keng for one and a half years in preparation for Cambridge Assessment International Education's (CAIE) Mathematics and Further Mathematics subjects and have had the opportunity to relate to him inside and outside the classroom.

Daniel is a bright student who shows promise. He has demonstrated good mathematical and intellectual ability. It is my belief that he has the potential to excel even better than the already good results he has obtained in his CAIE Examinations.

Daniel's greatest strength lies in his character and personality. As to his character, I vouch for his sense of integrity that is guided by a strong sense of morality and values to do the right thing. As to his personality, he is amiable and relates well with his circle of friends and generally to anyone he meets.

Daniel has demonstrated good leadership skills as the elected class representative for the three semesters he was with me. He has the charisma to rally his peers together and has been responsible in carrying out his duties.

I gladly and highly recommend him to your institution and in his application for any scholarship/financial aid.

Yours sincerely,
